Defense, War-Related Research Worth Millions to UC System

Since 1943 when it began operating the Los Alamos Scientific Laboratory for the development of the first atomic bomb, the University of California has continued war-related research under several federal contracts.

Numbering in the millions of dollars, these contracts range from further nuclear research to methods of biological and psychological warfare. To some degree almost every campus of the University is involved and has or will be affected by it.

To bring the matter closer to home, the Santa Barbara campus will receive $766,700 within the next two years from University contracts with the Atomic Energy Commission (AEC). The three major University contracts with the AEC deal with research at the Lawrence Radiation Laboratory at Berkeley and Livermore, with nuclear testing at Los Alamos, New Mexico, and with medical-biological research.

Specifically, the money that this campus will receive is provided by the Nuclear Science Fund (NSF) which is set up from overhead reimbursement (operating expense kickbacks) on the AEC contracts. The NSF, which was established by the regents in 1946, distributes money to each campus primarily for building programs.

The University contracts with the AEC and federal agencies provide funds which in many cases are channeled back into more facilities for more nuclear research. Two years ago this campus entered into a league with UCLA and USC termed the Southwest Regional Nuclear Consortium. This organization hopes to build a new branch of the University to be situated in the Santa Monica Mountains.

The Mountain Campus, as it would be called, would house research facilities containing a cyclotron and beam transport system as well as numerous computers. In addition to the (Continued on p. 8, col. 1)

Grapes in I.V. Market, 'Open Hearing' Today

A store manager's refusal to honor the Delano grapepickers' strike has touched off a controversy which will get its first major public airing Wednesday noon on the UCen lawn.

Concerned students have announced an open hearing to investigate Isla Vista Market manager Verne Johnson's policy of continuing to stock California table grapes.

The fact-finding session was called after a campus discussion group going under the name of Free University Coalition (FUC) charged Johnson with "racism toward striking Mexican-American pickers."

FUC has also called on Johnson to retract his comment to EL GAUCHO about "dirty, ragged, barefoot protestors," an apparent reference to strike sympathizers who have picketed I.V. Market.

Signs have sprouted on campus bulletin boards reading "Boycott I.V. Market--They Sell Grapes" and much of the local reaction is similar.

"I sympathize with the strike, I don't buy grapes myself; I wouldn't favor the boycott, but I wouldn't oppose it," said Richard Luboff, Sr., Poli Sci.

"Not buying grapes would help the pickers but I don't know about the boycott . . . isn't it the store's prerogative?" commented Renate Reich, Soph, French.

Goleta businessman Fred Fields thinks that "in a university atmosphere where people are supposedly intelligent, not to recognize the importance of Delano is to close your eyes to the world . . . I feel Delano is a situation where people are starving because of exploitation by capitalists. Society should recognize evil, and apply pressure."

Students have invited Johnson to appear at Wednesday's meeting to discuss the issues.

Also participating in the discussion will be representatives of A.S., UMAS, and the Santa Barbara Committee to Aid Farm Workers.

The other two grocery stores in I.V. have taken grapes off their shelves: the manager at Stop 'n Go claimed to have practical considerations in mind when pulling the grapes.

FUC leaders, however, say they are not interested in the store's sincerity or motivation: "We don't care why he doesn't sell grapes . . . as long as he doesn't sell grapes. That's all that matters."

Sit-in at UC Berkeley Over Cleaver Credit

BERKELEY (UniPress) -- About 125 students remained in Sproul Hall late yesterday as the prospect of more protestors grew.

Demanding that the registrar grant Social Analysis 139X credit, the students moved into the Administration Building shortly after Eldridge Cleaver gave his third lecture in Dwinelle Hall.

The protestors, led by students enrolled in 139X, issued a statement that said, "We will remain at the Registrar's office until credit is granted."

According to a reporter at the Daily Californian, the student newspaper, the crowd size dropped from about 200 during the afternoon as students went to classes and prepared a leaflet.

The building does not normally close until 7 p.m., and observers questioned whether policemen would clear the building at that time, noting that "the last thing the administration wants now is cops brought onto the campus."

A second statement issued by the students said, "We have begun. Over one hundred students are sitting-in inside Sproul Hall, and several hundred more are lending their support outside. "We ask all concerned students to support us."

In his lecture to the students in 139X, which is presently being offered on a non-credit basis, Cleaver said, "If you think this (the sit-in) is worthwhile, then do your thing."

Sponsors of the student-initiated course have conducted it on a non-credit basis so that Cleaver, Minister of Information of the Black Panthers and Peace and Freedom Party candidate for President, could give 10 lectures. They have simultaneously pushed for credit, however, and yesterday's action was the latest in a series of moves.

The statement said that the action was being taken because the Regents did not rescind the September 20 resolution and the Academic Senate has taken no action.

The demonstration was reportedly not disruptive, and Daily Cal staffers said there was a possibility that the administration would "just let them sit there all night." The students were said to have been lining the halls and leaving an aisle so that others could enter and leave the Registrar's office.

Prop 3 Ahead In State Polls

BERKELEY--California voters, according to a state-wide poll, presently favor Proposition 3, the proposed bond issue for future construction at the state colleges, the University of California and rundown urban schools.

The test vote, conducted by Don M. Muchmore's State Poll, shows 54 per cent in favor of Proposition 3; 25 per cent are opposed and 21 per cent "don't know." The poll included 1,007 personal "in-home" interviews conducted September 28 and 29 among a scientifically selected cross section of registered voters.

Proposition 3 would provide about $100 million for construction on the nine UC campuses, an equal amount for the 19 state college campuses, and $50 million to repair and replace rundown urban schools.

H.B. Atwood, Executive Director of the Citizen's Committee for "YES" on Proposition 3, commented that "while the poll is encouraging, the slim margin above 50 per cent actually favoring the Proposition indicates that many voters still need to be convinced about the urgency of building needs at the University and at state colleges.

"The two systems face 14,000 new students a year, and passage of Proposition 3 is essential if we are to have the facilities to house them."

FROST COOL ON CLASS CONTINUATION

BSU 'Liberator' Almost Dropped

By JOE KIEFFER
EG Reporter

Dr. Frank Frost, assistant professor of history, recently took measures to drop any members of his classes that participated in Monday's "liberation" of North Hall.

"I was particularly angered with the seizure of North Hall because it prevented the meeting of eight History 4A discussion sections," Frost said.

"I therefore took steps to drop anyone involved from my classes. It turned out that only one student from History 4A was among the twelve under suspended suspension. The next day he came to see me and we discussed the situation in an atmosphere of mutual respect.

"I told him what he had to do to get back into the class and he agreed to do so. I have informed the Dean of Students of the action taken and all concerned regard the matter as closed."

Earlier in the week, Frost had said that members of his class participating in the disturbance "might as well drop out now. None of them . . . will get a grade for this quarter." However, it is unlikely that he could have enforced any expulsion move.

According to administration officials, no teacher has the authority to drop a student once he is enrolled and has filed his IBM card. Only students may remove themselves from a class.

Asked if there was any justification in the black students' action, Frost said, "That is never justified. Ends never justify means. However, I am sympathetic to their cause. They're not accustomed to the campus as other students. When they say that it was the only way--well--maybe they were honest. But I'm mainly concerned with teaching."

In his 4A class Tuesday, Frost "opened the floor" to discussion of the incident. In (Continued on p. 8, col. 1)
